On behalf of the Australian Institute of Professional Investigators, I have great pleasure in extending to you a invitation to attend our biennial conference on 11 September 2014.

Information is now all around us. In business, in government and in the community. Everyone now has at their fingertips information that was inaccessible just a few years ago.

This has created opportunities on both sides of the misconduct divide – opportunities for people who seek to take advantage of more liberal access to information and those who seek to investigate their conduct.

Formerly, gathering the most fundamental information in support of an investigation was resource intensive and slow.

Information now available to the misconduct investigator has grown exponentially – in some cases, the investigator can gather more information than he or she can cope with. Overlaying all of this is 'social media'. The quantum of information now available to the misconduct investigator via social media is immense

This conference will present more than fifteen experts in their field who will deliver material at the cutting-edge of these issues.

We see this conference as an opportunity for us to confirm our place as the pre-eminent body representing professional investigators in Australia.

We would be delighted to have your support.

This year we have added a post conference dinner to the program and will be announcing our special guest shortly.

I look forward to seeing you there.
